2nd IRPA workshop on reasonableness in the implementation of the ALARA principle

23-24 October, 2018

Paris - FRANCE

Espace IESF

7, rue Lamennais
75008 Paris

Context

Optimisation principle is the cornerstone of the Radiological Protection (RP) system. However, it is recognized that the “reasonable” level of protection according to the ALARA principle is not easy to demonstrate. Taking into account the benefit of feedback experience from different countries and complementing IRPA's reflection in the 2016 IRPA letter on the evolution of the RP system, SFRP proposed an initiative on the search for reasonableness. This initiative was agreed during IRPA 14 Congress in Cape Town in May 2016. A first workshop was organised in Paris the 23-24 February 2017. Several attendees, from European, Japanese and Korean RP Societies, and International Organisations (IRPA, ICRP, NEA, WHO, EAN) shared their experience.

The objectives of the first workshop were to review the foundation of the optimisation principle (ICRP system, ethical dimensions, ALARA culture) and examine the practical implementation of this principle in 3 sectors: nuclear, medicine, existing exposure situations (radon, radium, post-accident). The participants tried to answer the question: how low is low enough? The main conclusions of the first workshop were that in all sectors, optimisation remains a challenge and that optimisation is a deliberative process to achieve a reasonable “compromise” with all (informed) stakeholders. The synthesis of the first workshop was published in “Radioprotection” (2017, Vol 52, N°4).

With the second workshop, the objective is to show how the search for reasonableness can be practically done through continuous dialogue. The workshop will be focused on case-studies:

- Related to public, occupational and medical exposure (e.g. discharges, waste, legacies, medical procedures);
- In the 3 sectors (nuclear, medical, existing exposure situations);
- Showing the involvement of stakeholders including capacity building.
